e-network family is growing – help it grow more

Friday, July 19, 2002 – It might interest you to know that the Internet has become the key means by which CPRN disseminates the results of its research.

Since the beginning of this year, more than 209,155 electronic copies of our publications have been downloaded from our Web site. It is a truly extraordinary figure and speaks, we feel, to the relevance and usefulness of our work. And we believe you, our e-network subscribers, are the primary reason for our success in this regard.

There is clearly a close relationship between our alerting you to the latest publications available on our site and the number of downloads that follow.

With this in mind, we are hoping you will agree that if you find our site worthwhile, others you know who may not have heard of us will feel likewise. If so, please alert them to our existence and to the fact that both this service, e-network, and our publications are available for free.

We would like to make this a banner year in terms of the circulation of CPRN's research publications. We think this will be good for the important debates the country faces today and in future. It will also help make the case for further support for the work of CPRN and like-minded organizations.

Thank you all!
