CPRN Seeks New Development Leader

April 20, 2001 – In 1998, the External Review Committee on CPRN noted the importance of diversifying the organization's funding sources. It also argued that to be truly responsive to policy demands, as well as to carry out the important tasks of explaining and disseminating the results of its research, CPRN needed the financial flexibility only long-term funding commitments, or major gifts, could ensure.

Since that time, CPRN has taken several steps to bolster its long-term sustainability. Diversifying and strengthening its funding base is the next major challenge.

To achieve that goal, CPRN will need expert help in reaching out to foundations, corporations and individuals who share our interest in engaging Canadians in a debate over the social and economic issues vital to their future. Success in gaining their financial support will ensure that CPRN continues to play a key role in helping Canadians achieve the society they want in the 21st century.

The international executive search firm, Heidrick and Struggles is conducting the search for a person to fill the position of "Development Leader" at CPRN.
