Rianne Mahon wins History Prize

June 15, 2001 – Rianne Mahon, author most recently of the CPRN Family Network study, "School-Aged Children Across Canada: A Patchwork of Public Policies", has been awarded the 2001 Hilda Neatby Prize in Women's History.

The purpose of the award is "to encourage the publication of articles in women's history and gender history as it relates to women in Canadian journals and books". Two prizes are awarded each year, one in English and one in French.

Rianne Mahon won the award for her paper, "The Never Ending Story: The Struggle for Universal Child Care Policy in the 1970s". It was published in the December 2000 issue of the Canadian Historical Review.

Rianne teaches in the School of Public Administration and in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Carleton University in Ottawa.

Congratulations Rianne!
