Fall Edition of Network News Now Available

October 12, 2001 – Welcome to our new format "Network News".

More than 200,000 visitors came to the CPRN Web site in the past year. They took away with them more than 260,000 electronic copies of our publications!

In keeping with those facts, we decided to focus our efforts more on the net than ever before. Part of that shift involves a makeover of our quarterly newsletter, "Network News". We hope you like it, and, of course, we'd like to hear what you have to say about it.

In this issue:

Two reports on the status of Canadian children with disabilities and their families. Fraser Valentine and Michael Prince find that their experience falls far short of full citizenship.

There's a presentation by Graham Lowe, Director of the Work Network, on the impact of our ageing population on the labour market and the twin challenges facing employers of recruiting and holding onto their workforce.

A study by Sholom Glouberman and Caryl Arundel examines the problems related to transfer of clients from hospitals to home care, a report by Graham Lowe on a National Roundtable on Learning describes the "Vision for Learning" it produced, and a paper by Anil Verma and Zsuzsanna Lonti investigates innovative practices in the public sector workplace.

There's news of Jane Jenson's appointment to a Tier One Canada Research Chair at the Université de Montréal, and plenty of other news of comings and goings among CPRN's Board and staff.

Finally, there's our feature commentary from CPRN's President, Judith Maxwell, this time on the social implications of the "New Economy".
